Teach me Your ways, O Lord...

The Beatitudes, those memorable sayings of Jesus, show how sharp the contrast is between the common perceptions of what it means to be happy and what true happiness is. We are familiar with the saying that God’s ways are not our ways and the beatitudes give us a glimpse of the way God looks at things. They are a strong statement that his view of success and failure, joy and sorrow, want and plenty is different from ours. By presenting us with a bigger picture and broader horizon of life, they make us realize that what we possess in this world is of fleeting significance and something that will pass away.

The essence of the Christian message is that Jesus sees things differently than we do and his values stand in sharp contrast as to what the world holds important. Holiness and wealth do not fit comfortably side by side. Human success and power count for nothing in God’s eyes. What Jesus proposes is that we live by gospel values and not by our own natural impulses. The reward is an inner joy that no one can take away.

The Challenge of Passing on the Faith

One common challenge faced by all Catholics is passing on the faith. There is no perfect method but Catholic Teaching does have three things to say-- Christian education is: 1) more witnessed to than taught 2) more occasional than systematic and 3) more ongoing than structured.

Firstly, Christian education is more witnessed to than taught. When we reflect back on what we learned growing up we rarely remember the subjects but we do remember the people that had an impact on us. It was their actions more than their words that impacted us.

As we witness to our children it is important to be genuine and not project onto them how the perfect Christian should be. If they are tired and don’t feel like going to Mass on a Sunday morning we should share with them that at times we feel the same way but there is something at work during Mass greater than ourselves and inspire them to discover what that is.

The second point is that passing on the faith is more occasional than systematic. If we sit down with our children and pound through the teachings of the faith at the dinner table night after night the faith is going to seem dogmatic and a burden. Faith is supposed to set us free from bondage and slavery so it should be shared as God’s grace gives us the opportunities to do so.

Two such examples are in response to the passing of a family member or a family challenge. It is during life events such that we can personally exhibit how the faith helps us get through such difficulties. Sharing with our children what the Church has to say on death can give them hope at a time of despair. The same goes for a family challenge, when our children experience the peace that Christ gives in helping the family to deal with a difficulty they will learn to trust in God when faced by such challenges individually.

Thirdly, the religious education of our children is more ongoing than structured. Our children don’t have to have things all figured out by the time they enter high school or leave home. We journey with them and help them to grow spiritually as they are ready.

It is natural for children to challenge their parents and other significant people in their lives as they seek out their identities and question: “How can God and others love them as much as they do?” Parents have to allow their children to experience life just as the Prodigal Son did and then patiently wait as the Father did. The Spirit is alive and well in our children and it is a parent’s vocation to nourish and kindle the Spirit already burning within.
