Building Confidence in Self and God

A primary concern of most parents is to develop the self-confidence of their children. One might think that to build a child's self-confidence you repeatedly tell them how amazing they are and help them accumulate personal achievements but the research indicates otherwise. It seems that the subconscious is suspicious of the motivation behind such affirmations and accolades and for the most part disregards them. What the research does show is that self-confidence is grown through experience. Studies show that the experience of using one's abilities to face and overcome difficult situations is what truly develops self-confidence.

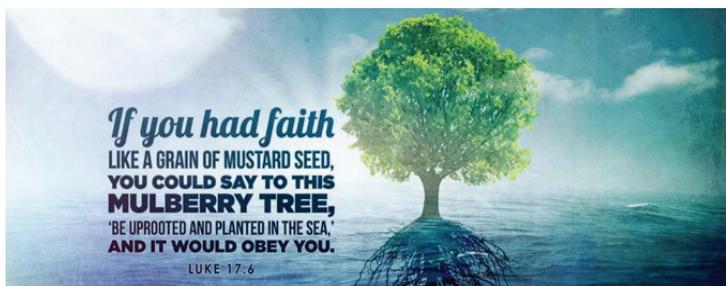

I believe the same theory can be applied to the faith. Though affirming our children's identities as Children of God has positive benefits, it is not how Jesus developed the faith of his followers. He sent them out and told them to take nothing for the journey: 'neither walking stick, nor sack, nor food, nor money.' What Jesus did give them was the power and authority of the Holy Spirit and without material support, the disciples fully relied on it. We witness this repeatedly in the bible starting with the Abraham, the Father of Faith, who was called to leave the comforts of home in faith that God would provide, and God did.

Naturally, when we live in comfort there is less need for us to fully trust in God. Richard Leonard a Jesuit priest describes in his book, Why Bother Praying, how as a second year novice he was dropped 200kms from the original Jesuit retreat house in the middle of Australia and had to walk the entire way back to it begging for food and accommodation each day. Fr. Richard said that he learned more about prayer in those 10 days than he did the 25 years prior living in a comfortable Australian community.

Bishop Barron notes that our faith needs to be strong and tested for it to be authentic as he points out: "One of the most painful truths of the last century is that the weakness of [true] Christian witness allows some of the worst elements in society to flourish. Think of the rise of the evil powers that created World War II. Christianity had become so weak, so unconvincing, so attenuated that great evil was allowed to flourish. Yes, indeed there were a handful of powerful Christian resisters, but let's face it: the overwhelmingly vast majority of Christians either supported Hitler or remained in silence, out of either fear or indifference." It seems that our desire for comfort has the opposite effect making us more fearful, unresponsive and ultimately unfulfilled.

Therefore, if we want to develop the self-confidence and faith of our children we have to be comfortable exposing them to a little hardship. Setting aside time for more intensive periods of prayer, fasting, almsgiving and service is a good place to start. In the end, they will come out more faithful, self-confident, and best of all they will discover the unfathomable depths of God's love for them, a love they can trust and be confident in.

John Humphries.

The gospel stresses the importance of unwavering faith, which is the courage to live with the uncertainty of not knowing all the answers. Faith does make a difference in the way we view our life and makes it possible to carry many a cross that would otherwise seem insupportable.

It is never a question of faith or no faith; the question is always "In what or in whom do I put my faith?" – possessions, power, people or God. People of faith believe that every person matters and that God takes small things and makes them into great things. As we take to heart the word of God, faith can inspire us to change direction and accomplish marvelous feats. Faith is knowing without seeing, believing without fully understanding and trusting without touching the One who is ever faithful. Faith is stepping out and doing the things we believe God wants us to do, even if it does not make sense. Having created the natural world, God has placed us as stewards of his creation. He has left us free to create the social world and it is up to us to build or destroy, to hurt or heal, to reach out or be selfish.
